A Beautiful Home.

Perhaps the levellest grounds, surrounding any public or private buildies to Virginia are to be seen on an estate of Mr. Robert Portner, near Manassas. The walks and drives are beautifully laid out and kept in perfect order. Rare exotics and beautiful shade trees dot the lawn which is cleanly shaven and as exquisitely kept as a city park. A bathing pool and a series of ponde, one below the other, are filled from an artesian well. The ponds contain various kinds of fish and on the surface of one of them a pair of exquisite white swans swim around in luxurious idleness. A park enclosed with wire netting contains a herd of deer and Angora goats—the does, elsejing or licking their young, the bucks browsing and locking around to note the first approach of the stranger that they may signal the heard to disappear. On another part of the estate are a number of broad mares with young colts at their eldes, among them a few of Kentucky's best bred trotters, but majority of them are Clydesdales. In parfect preservation, but oramonted with shrubbery and cosy seats is an earthern em bankment known as Fort Besuregard. Over bankment known as Fort Beauregard. Over the silent guns and piles of cannon balls, the peaceful clematis winds his tendrils. From his height, here and there a peak of the Blue Ridge can be seen, while nearer the Bull Rue mountains rise affording a perfect view of their picturesque uneven-ness. Just over there where once the smoke of battle rose and the resper, death, had a bounteous harvest, wheat fields are ripening in the sun and the air is freghted with the perfume of new mown hay. Nawith the perfume of new mown hay. Na-ture thus repairs her ravages, repairs them with sunshine and with flowers; in the heart of man alone smolders the fire of un-dying hate. We learn from the English landscape gardened, Tyler, that the owner of this beautiful spot has not looked upon it for more than two years, so occupied is he with his engrossing business. But should he over want to steal away from the world and its cares and dream out the remnant of busy life, earth cannot offer him a fairer spot.—Warrenton Virginian.

Army of Northern Virginia.

The annual meeting of the Association of the Army of Northern Virginia was held in the hall of the House of Delegates in Richmond last night, General Payne presiding. General M. L. Nelson of the artillery, and Thomas Nelson Page, of Vir-giola, were also present.

doctrine of States' rights and the South and paid a high tribute to Confederate valor. He also paid a high tribute to Gen.
